Profile: Overview

Peter's practice has three core areas: Banking and Financial Services, Property Litigation and Professional Negligence. Having started his career in the City as a fund manager at a leading investment bank, he has a particular interest in matters involving asset management and the sale and distribution of investment products.

Banking and Financial Services

Misselling claims concerning a wide variety of financial products form a substantial part of Peter's practice. In recent years, Peter has appeared perhaps more often than any other member of the Bar at hearings concerning a claimant's date of knowledge for limitation purposes in the context of financial advice, including in the Court of Appeal in Jacobs v Sesame Ltd. Property

Peter's property practice includes cases concerning the enforcement of mortgages and the management of property investment portfolios. He appeared for the lender in the Court of Appeal in Graves v Capital Home Loans Ltd, one of a limited number of authorities considering the unfair relationships provisions of the Consumer Credit Act in the context of mortgage enforcement. Professional Negligence

Peter's professional negligence practice reflects his two other core practice areas. In addition to his involvement in claims against financial practitioners, Peter acts not only for claimants but also for defendant professionals and their insurers in matters arising from conveyancing, secured lending and other property transactions. He has appeared in two of the recent line of cases involving claims against solicitors (including for breach of trust and breach of warranty of authority) in respect of losses resulting from identity fraud: Dreamvar (UK) Ltd v Mishcon de Reya (with Jeremy Cousins QC) and Ikbal v Sterling Law. He is frequently instructed to attend the mediation of professional negligence claims. Click here for further details of Peter's practice in this area.

Pensions

A significant proportion of Peter's financial mis-selling practice concerns pension products. He has been instructed in numerous recent claims brought by members of occupational schemes or holders of personal pension plans who have been persuaded to invest (usually via a SIPP) in a variety of failed or fraudulent ventures. Many such claims involve issues as to the obligations and potential liability of the SIPP operator. Click here for further details of Peter's practice in this area.

Other work

In addition to commercial disputes in the banking and financial services sector, Peter has acted in various cases involving the commercial application of trust or other equitable principles. Furthermore, Peter's expertise in the field of investment overlaps with those practice areas where clients tend to make extensive use of investment products and services: in particular, charities and private clients. In the course of his career at the Bar, Peter has acquired experience of most areas of Chancery work. Click on the Practice Areas menu to the left for further details of Peter's practice in the relevant area. .

Brexit

COMBAR has produced a series of detailed papers explaining the potential effect of Brexit on various areas of commercial legal practice. Peter is one of the authors of the paper on Financial Services, contributing to chapters on the Mortgage Credit Directive 2014/17/EU (in so far as it affects mortgage brokers and intermediaries) and the Alternative Investment Fund Managers Directive 2011/61/EU. Public Access

Peter is permitted to accept instructions under the Bar public access scheme and is always happy to consider doing so in suitable cases (in particular, where an institutional client is seeking specialist advice or a client is seeking preliminary advice with a view to instructing solicitors in due course).
